CELEBRATION OF THE FIRST DECADE OF COUNTY AGENT WORK

Broome County, New York, holds Pageant "The Progress of an Idea" Showing the Development of Ten Years of Organized Cooperative Extension Work.

On March 20, Broome County, New York, completed the first decade of county agent work in that county. This was the first county to take up this form of extension work in the thirty-six states outside of the cotton belt. The event was celebrated by a three-act pageant, "The Progress of an Idea," involving the original county agent, J. H. Barron, representative of the Delaware, Lackawanna, and Western Railway, the Binghamton Chamber of Commerce and the United States Department of Agriculture, who were identified with starting the movement. This was followed with a banquet, community singing, and public speaking, which made up the program.

More than a hundred counties in the North and West will round out their first decade of work within the next two years. The idea of celebrating this birthday in some fitting manner seems worth while.
